Welcome,

It is with great joy that we welcome you all to the 14th International Sándor Ferenczi Conference 2024. It is also a great honor to welcome you to São Paulo to debate the topic “Psychoanalysis between catastrophe and creation: emerging perspectives.”

At the 13th International Sándor Ferenczi Conference in Florence, in 2018, the International Sándor Ferenczi Network (ISFN) took a bold chance: it appointed its newcomer member society GBPSF (Brazilian Sándor Ferenczi Research Group) to organize and host the next Conference, in 2021. One year before that, however, we were surprised by the Covid-19 pandemic, and the world was never the same. The International Conference was postponed... sine die.

In the meantime, the Brazilian Group saw its influence grow exponentially in the country. Thanks to the enthusiasm and voluntary workforce of our members, we organized in-person events, live streams and online scientific meetings during the pandemic. The opportunity to have Mackenzie Presbyterian University as the venue for our Conference made it possible for us to organize an event for 900 people, with more than 260 papers approved. As such, the 14th International Sándor Ferenczi Conference became a milestone in the history of the ISFN.

Ferenczi’s timeliness is due to his meticulous attention to the vulnerability of the living, to the inseparability of nature and culture, and to the complex power relations in our societies. His thinking transmitted a new clinical sensitivity for addressing individual and collective trauma, thus making it possible for us to reflect on the interdependence between humans, and between humans and non-humans, through the lens of psychoanalysis. No psychoanalyst has been as attentive to the creative power held by welcoming and empathetic relationships as Ferenczi.

At such an important point of the process of working through the trauma experienced by all of us because of the imposed social distancing of recent years, we hope to have a stimulating conference, with positive encounters and a renewal of our destination community.

Jô Gondar – Vice-president

“Is it tagging or graffiti?”

“Is it art or is it a cry?”

The iconic graffiti artist

#DI# would say

“It is human.”

“Urban art is also speech therapy. In a society as unequal and unfair as Brazil’s, few people have access to places of power and established places of speech. Artists from the outskirts, as well as the millions of workers who commute within the city and also the unemployed, do not enter the MASP (São Paulo Art Museum).

Urban art, considering its dimensions and possibilities, has been creating a place of speech for the subordinate, not always recognized or legitimized. Urban artists create a community and recognize each other, providing dignity to the voices of those who are silenced in our cities. It is not just about aesthetic interventions, but about the creation of a true ecosystem in which artists, the region’s community and the population are included. The city is permanently transforming, and we in turn transform its fabric, its skin, its walls; and we transform with the city.

The power of urban art in São Paulo is significant not only for Brazil. “Minhocão” is one of the largest linear galleries in the world, especially for the 98% of society that does not have access to museums and experiences urban art as an educational movement, as a health action, as urbanity.

Urban art is our social therapy.”

Psychoanalysis between catastrophe and creation: Emerging Perspective

São Paulo, Brazil

THE CONFERENCE

Ours is a time of trauma. After centuries of destruction through slavery, war and genocide, there is rising nationalism, fear, and hatred, mixed with violence, all around the world. Existential threats — climate change, ecological disasters, and the pandemic — intensify inequality, racism, fanaticism, terrorism, and worse. Sándor Ferenczi's contributions are exceptionally helpful in our understanding of current global challenges.

Throughout his working life, Ferenczi consistently showed deep understanding of the complex and traumatizing dynamics of power and human vulnerability. The differences between healing words and traumatizing words are envisioned in Ferenczi's concept of the confusion of languages. His expressive and evocative constructs of care, the language of tenderness, recognizes the dignity and the humanity of the vulnerable other, and, thus, favors generating meaning for a more creative existence. His language of passion describes the toxicity of an authoritarian narrative and the traumatic denial through which words can wound and humiliate the vulnerable. A culture catastrophically harmed by toxic words must relearn or learn anew the language of tenderness, empathy, and recognition, in order to address integration, inclusion and sensitivity, the experience of moving forward, and a chance to heal.

We suggest that Ferenczi's clinical work includes social and political dialogues about trauma and its treatment as part of the many ways of connecting with others. His notions of disavowal, fragmentation, identification with the aggressor, as well as his progressive clinical work in responding to traumatic experiences reflect contemporary egalitarian ideals and enhance our capacity to think and act with others.

The 14th International Sándor Ferenczi Conference in Sao Paulo, Brazil, will bring together clinicians, scholars, researchers, students, and colleagues from other fields of knowledge for open, and collegial discussions. We ask how psychoanalysis may add to our capacity to think about the disruptive social, personal, political, environmental, and clinical situations that we are facing today.

THEMES

THEME 1

Emerging from Catastrophes. Social and Environmental Transformations.

Psychoanalysis can provide a more livable life for each subject. A more livable life is not just a matter of the individual, it also includes the recognition of an interdependence between humans, non-humans, the atmosphere, climatic conditions, and the universal right to breathe and exist. Ferenczi's perspectives value multiplicity and refuse to think in either/or dichotomies (see his bioanalysis and utraquist method), such as nature/culture, body/mind, internal world/external world, progression/regression, creation/destruction etc. We invited papers that explore these perspectives. The Conference Themes represent the common and, we imagine, fertile ground for a critical and creative understanding of the catastrophes of our time, working on Ferenczi's contributions and the way in which they enrich our perspectives for responding to the destabilizing upheavals that have been happening all over the world.

The Clinical and the Sociopolitical. Challenges for Psychoanalysis in Times of Trauma.

Ferenczi was a consistent critic of power inequities in society, in the family, and in the psychoanalytic situation. In a world where authoritarianism is rising, and the distortion of truth has a narcotizing impact on many, Ferenczi reminds us of the ethical in the human encounter, and the importance of respect for human dignity. We welcome papers that explore how sociopolitical dynamics in a polarized environment may contribute to the human suffering we see in our clinical practices, where we work to understand individual and social trauma. To facilitate our understanding of what our responsibilities are, we must ask what aspects of our work we are willing to challenge and what aspects we want to safeguard. We asked colleagues to contribute papers about transgenerational and acute trauma, social or individual trauma, witnessing, and testimony from clinical and/or theoretical viewpoints. We also encourage papers on technique, transference and countertransference, and contemporary models of therapeutic action that grasped Ferenczian ideas such as tact, empathy, elasticity, and mutuality in the analysis of persons living with today's traumatic challenges.

THEME 3

Fragmentation and its Consequences on Psychic Life.

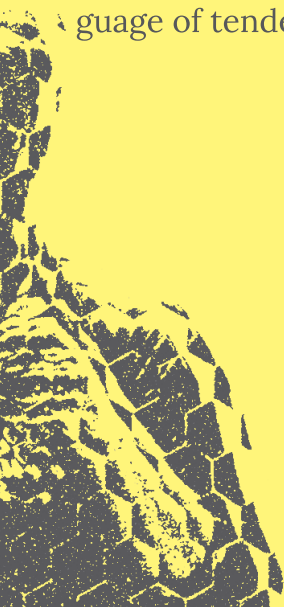

Trauma, actually experienced, in the external world has consequences on the internal world of psychic reality. Fragmentation of the Self and the multiplicity of self fragments can result in terrifying, somatized, or dissociated experiences revisiting the subject as phantoms of past traumas buried in the psyche. For Sándor Ferenczi, the legacy of trauma is not only the memory of an event but also its recognition by the other, and whatever creative changes in the therapeutic process of becoming that are opened up to the subject, harmed by disavowal, historical discontinuity, and the fractured Self. Participants are invited to submit papers in search of a narrative which captures the traumatizing and fragmenting experiences of people, as well as about possible integration from fragmentation to a capacity for internal conflict, reflecting post-traumatic creative processes of psychic growth.

Confusion of Tongues. Tenderness, Trauma and Toxicity.

Distinctions between the healing word and the traumatizing word are envisioned in Ferenczi's concept of the confusion of languages. The language of tenderness, expressive and evocative, recognizes the dignity and humanity of the experience of the vulnerable other, and, thus offers the potential for a more creative existence. The language of passion humiliates the vulnerable with toxic words. Language collapses, there are no words to remember, and there is confusion between meaning and voice for the person catastrophically harmed by toxic words. In the Ferenczian perspective, when language collapses, psychic change is possible. We invite papers on language in the culture of hate as a clinical social phenomenon, and how elasticity in treatment can counter rigid word systems to facilitate the emergence of play, new thinking, new language, and more compassionate ideas about otherness, as the person learns (or relearns) the language of tenderness, empathy, and recognition.
